HIGH EXPECTATIONS, EMPLOYMENT AND STUDENT SUCCESS

Dr. Cathy Hamilton has spent the majority of her professional career in the public school arena, nineteen years in the language arts classroom (middle school, high school, and collegiate) and sixteen years in either middle school, high school, or education service center administrative positions.

Recognized for excellence in the classroom and in the administrative office, Dr. Hamilton is known for her work around differentiated instruction as it impacts at-risk learners, particularly children carrying special education labels. She served for thirteen years on an Ohio Department of Education committee aimed at creating inclusive environments through effective instruction and clear assessment strategies; the initial target of this committee was to create a more inviting environment for students with identified disability, better insuring their quality education.

Teacher, school principal, and national consultant, Dr. Hamilton is first a mother of a thirty-seven-year-old daughter diagnosed with multiple disabilities at age five. She knows the challenges for those with identified disability, from the assigned classrooms they inhabit to the homes where they live. She is acutely aware of the history of our current approach to disability and the challenge facing those who too often have been marginalized by policies and lack of knowledge and/or skill.

Cathy is the president of her own education consultancy firm, which operates within the concepts of equity and dignity for all people and the assurance that continuous learning moves us all further along that journey. Hamilton's doctoral work is in leadership.
